

Colour My Rover

Post by "feedposter" of Feb 18th 2024, 8:16 pm

Quote from theLEGOcarblogger.com

Image not found or type unknown

TLCB Staff, being curmudgeonly bores, think that Rovers are old British cars of increasing mediocrity. The Online Lego Community however, thinks the word means something far more whimsical.

2024's 'Febrovery' - wherein dozens of extraordinary planetary exploration vehicles are constructed - is well underway, and we have another two wonderfully diverse rovers-of-the-spacey-type here today.

The first (above) is the delightfully hued 'Greeble Transport Rover', built to carry the tiny grey pieces that make up the most science-fiction parts of spaceships. Ironically needing none itself, the 'Greeble Transport Rover' is instead a riot of colour, and there's more to see courtesy of Febrovery veteran Frost.

Our second rover (below) forgoes the colour of Frost's machine replacing it with earthy greys. Four sets of tracks and a great many triangles complete the utilitarian look, and there's more to see of Horcik Designs' 'Rover Expedition Ready' at his photostream on Flickr.

Click the final two links above to see more of each rover, and the first if you fancy checking out the Febrovery building bonanza in full, where there's not an old British car to be found anywhere. We promise.

Image not found or type unknown

Display More

<https://thelegocarblog.com/2024/02/18/colour-my-rover/>

Post by "ANEKIN" of Feb 18th 2024, 10:27 pm

Deen as mega. Cool 😊😊😊😊😊😊